February 27, 2013 3 min. Read the opinions expressed by entrepreneurs of depositors are their own. Today, Microsoft has finally released its Office 365 Small Business Premium, an online version of Microsoft's office performance toolkit with a focus on online collaboration. The Redmond, Washington-based software giant announced its new Office 2013 package and Consumer Office 365 Home Premium Service last month. But today's general edition of Small Business Premium means that Microsoft's full office software is now widely available on the Internet for small businesses savvy in the cloud. At $15 a month, or $150 per year, per user, Microsoft's popular business office software suite goes a step further than the company's core small business hosted email and calendar package. Office 365 offers access to both web and desktop versions of Word, Outlook and Excel, as well as website building tools and other business applications up to five devices per user. We spent about two weeks combing through the software package, looking at its strengths and weaknesses. Here are three ideas for small business users who are considering upgrading to Office 365 Small Business Premium Edition: Related: 8 Reasons Microsoft Surfaces Better Than iPad 1. Heavy Word, Excel and PowerPoint users are ideal users. Users of the PowerMicrosoft Office software - with established versions of Word, Excel and PowerPoint - should find that files are easier to share, manage and manage with this latest version of Office 365. Some of the new features include customizable email addresses, website naming tools, the ability to track contacts and employees on social networks such as LinkedIn and Facebook, and integration with mobile apps, especially for Windows Phones. The package also comes with increased security, including password management and centrally managed ID cards for easy addition and removal of personnel. In addition, Microsoft promises that it will not scan emails or documents and share data for advertising purposes, as some claim other web office software companies do. 2. Smaller firms might want to try Office 365 Home Premium instead. All this opportunity has a price. Depending on the Office 365 package, users may need both a paid license for an Office software user, which can cost $399 per seat, or a monthly office 365 payment. February 27, 2013 3 min.
